

FLATTENING DELUGE

August 10, 2011

By Michael Erlewine (Michael@Erlewine.net)

Six inches of rain in one hour left, well... a lot of water. Many of the streets were too deep to drive in. The lightening storm that came with it was the worst I have seen in my life, blinding-close bolts of lightning only seconds apart, like the finale at the fireworks and deafening.

It flattened many plants entirely and left large droplets on the rest. Here is one.

Nikon D3s, CV-125, Zerene Stacker

